Responsible Travel

What Responsible Travel does.

Responsible Travel aren't travel agents. They don't sell holidays. Instead, they advise eco-conscious and ethically-minded tourists about which holidays they should buy. They carry out detailed checks on the holidays provided by the world's best tour operators and approve only those holidays which meet their stringent criteria.

What Responsible Travel expects.

Responsible Travel's requirements are that, as far as possible, tour operators must employ local people. Local guides must always accompany visitors in local communities. Tourists must be given advice on how to minimise their impact on the environment. For example, they should be given re-usable water bottles and shopping bags. They should be encouraged to travel on public transport, alongside the locals. Tour operators are strongly encouraged to support local projects, both by donating money and by giving their staff opportunities to volunteer. These opportunities benefit both the local community and the tour operators.

The needs of local people .

Tim Williamson, Customer Director of Responsible Travel, said:
"Ten per cent of the world's population depends on tourism and many of them live in developing countries, where tourism is growing fast. We at Responsible Travel consider the needs of local people, creating better places for them to live, which are also better places for our travellers to visit."

The role of local guides.
The role of local guides is key in this new kind of tourism. They work with tourists to ensure that they understand the culture before they meet local people. They help locals and visitors to communicate with each other, giving travellers an insight into the life and culture of local people that they would not be able to get otherwise. Guides are experts in the best places to go and can take travellers off the tourist track.

Thinking about cost...

Some approved holidays can be expensive. For example, a whale-watching week in Hawaii costs $£ 2459$ and a 15 day trip to Antarctica costs $£ 7885$. (It's a curious rule of travelling that the coldest places in the world are usually the most expensive to visit.) On the other hand, eight days in Indonesia start at a more modest $£ 464$.

STAY SAFE ON SAFARI

A safari is an adventure in which you will meet, and learn a lot about, African wildlife. But wild animals can also be very dangerous.

These rules are designed to keep you and the animals you will see safe.

1. Always stay in the vehicle. Wild animals do not associate vehicles with humans or food, so you are safe if you stay inside.
2. Listen to your guide. They understand animal behaviour and will notice if an animal is becoming agitated. Not every situation is safe and you should follow your guide's instructions immediately.
3. Keep your voices down. Don't use a flash on your camera.
4. Protect yourself by wearing mosquito repellent. The mosquito carries diseases which kill more people in Africa than any other creature. A good sunscreen and hat are essential. Always wear closed shoes to protect your feet from spiders, ticks and scorpions.
5. Don't carry food as this may attract animals.
6. If you do find yourself close to a wild animal, don't run.
